P R É C I S

By the time I sat under his tutelage, Dr. Heath was a skinny, wizened, old man. He was fond of telling his classes that he graduated from seminary at the fall of the Roman empire. Most of us believed him.

"I only weigh 98 pounds," he'd confide. "I'll probably be blown away in the next windstorm." In moments of weakness, generally while cramming for the every-Friday morning Greek test, there were those of us who devoutly wished for a tornado.

Dr. Heath taught New Testament Greek—never my best subject. In fact, I hated it with a passion surpassed only by his love for the language of Saint Paul and Saint Luke.

It took me four long years to wade through the four semesters of Greek needed to meet my language requirement. I never did come to share Dr. Heath's fervor for the subject.

By example, however, he sparked in me a genuine love for learning and a thirst for knowledge. "I'm up reading by 5:00 every morning," he would say. And it seemed he was forever running off to Greece for continued study, translation work, or participation in an archeological dig. (Even today, after having retired, he continues to teach in a college near his Florida home.)

The flame of learning Dr. Heath kindled in me was just one part of my Taylor experience. Yet, it has affected my life and my service to others.

To my mind, that's what Taylor is about. Here, individuals are educated for lifelong learning. Students are affected and, in turn, will affect the world around them.

It makes for a stimulating and challenging environment. As you read this issue, share a little of the excitement. Herein, you'll find highlighted reports from across the campus, pointing to significant accomplishments of the past year.

Also listed are the names of the many, many people who, together, ensure that Taylor maintains her standing as a beacon for Christian liberal arts education.

For all of us at Taylor, please allow me to thank you who are a part of this world-changing endeavor. Through your gifts and support, you spark the flame of learning in the hearts of young men and women who will influence the lives of countless people.

Broadcast beginnings

On page 37 of the Summer, 1989 issue of TAYLOR magazine, there is reference to radio & television programs developed in 1958 being broadcast over WLBC, Muncie, Indiana.

Taylor radio broadcasts on WLBC go back to the school year 1941-42, when friends of Dr. J.A. Huffman, Bible professor, made it possible. Either Dr. Huffman, or Dr. Robert Lee Stuart, the president of Taylor at that time, gave the sermon on the half-hour broadcast. Music was provided by students directed by Raymond Kreiner, vocal music professor, and Miss Thodora Bothwell, professor of organ and piano music. The broadcasts were aired on Sunday afternoons, live, by telephone, from Shreiner Auditorium, Helene Music Hall.

In the school year that followed, radio broadcasts were aired on WKMO, Kokomo, Indiana for 13 weeks, ending in a special hour-long broadcast of 'THE MESSIAH' by the Taylor Choral Society in December, 1942. This had the largest listening audience of any of the series.

Since I was college electrician those years, I was radio technician for the telephone connections.

Happy memories

In thinking of Taylor, one thinks of the inspiring professors who shaped one's life. It happens that during my life as a missionary and now as a volunteer prison worker, I have written at least 250,000 letters. I still write up to 15 letters a day to prisoners.

And how often my mind harks back to dear Professor Cline. How she just loved the English language! And how she imparted that love to her students; how she polished up our model letters. And, Professor Cline, I owe so much to you!

Student calendars campus: A Taylor 'Odyssey'

Taylor students who have always wondered how to keep track of athletic events, play productions, music concerts and assorted other activities have a friend in Connie Lindman, a senior Communication Studies major.

Last year, Lindman decided to put together a calendar/day planner, designed to make it easier for students to keep track of events.

The 1989-90 Odyssey, named to complement Taylor's yearbook, the Illum, became the realization of the dream for an activities calendar Lindman has had since her freshman year.

"When I came to Taylor," said Lindman, "I was unsure of when and where events were and I thought about the calendar I had used in high school."

The Odyssey, which was put together on the basis of Lindman's school calendar, includes dates and places for all athletic teams' events, play production dates, Student Activities Council (SAC) activities and other departmental functions which were available to Lindman late this summer.

As a Communication major, Lindman must complete a practicum, internship or independent study before graduation. She decided to prepare the school events calendar as her independent study project.

According to Lindman, she made different proposals of the idea, reviewed them with her adviser, then presented her ideas before the student senate in order to receive funding for her project.

Once her idea was approved, she began sending letters to department heads, and contacting people about the events to be collected in the planner.

Now that this year's Odyssey is completed and has generated enthusiasm among the student body, Lindman would like to see her project continued.

Student Services, a division of Taylor Student Organization (TSO), will take over the production of the calendar in the future.

According to Juanita Yoder, vice president for student services, the Odyssey has found a "home" in TSO and will hopefully be continued in the future.—AC

Jere Truex '68 named Hoosier of the Year

Conference, competition encourage leaders

High school students who are academically strong and who exhibit Christian leadership should be recognized, rewarded and encouraged.

That's the premise of Taylor University's annual High School Leadership Conference, held November 17-18 this year.

The conference offers nationally recognized speakers along with workshops, discussion groups and fellowship for all those attending the conference.

Another highlight is the Christian Leadership Scholarship competition, held in conjunction with the conference.

For students selected to participate in the competition, the conference offers an even more tangible award: the opportunity to win one of twelve partial tuition scholarships to attend Taylor University.

This year, three 80% of tuition scholarships (approximately $25,000 each) and nine 40% of tuition scholarships (approximately $13,000 each) comprised the competition's awards.

Since its inception five years ago, over $500,000 in scholarships have been awarded.

Wynn Lembright, vice president for student affairs and services, feels the money is invested wisely. He believes the scholarship program is vital because it enhances the Taylor community by bringing quality students to campus.

To be eligible for this scholarship, a student must be a senior in high school; be in the top 20% of his class; have a combined S.A.T. score of at least 1,000.

According to Larry Mealy, director of leadership development and student programs at Taylor, as students inquire about the scholarship, they become more aware of the leadership opportunities at Taylor.

Initially, 30 competitors are selected by scholarship judges (made up of faculty, administrators, friends of the University and students). Then, the selection process is continued at the Christian Leadership Conference.

After a student has received the scholarship, he or she must continue to exhibit leadership characteristics.

Recipients must maintain a 3.0 grade point average, continue to be active in leadership positions, take part in Taylor's mentor program, assist with instructing leadership classes, conferences and workshops and re-apply for the scholarship each year.

Freshman Derrick Sanford is one of eight competition winners currently at Taylor. He will take a leadership role in next year's leadership conference.

Mealy explains that the conference is not just for scholarship candidates. All students in grades nine through twelve are encouraged to attend.

"We want to begin developing leadership in students at an early age," Mealy said. "The High School Leadership Conference is a great way to support Christian youth as they develop leadership skills."—DS

Taylor grad named Hoosier of the Year

Indiana Governor Evan Bayh named Jere Truex '68, Hoosier of the Year for 1989, during the Annual Governor's Conference for Persons with Disabilities.

Struck by polio at age 7, Truex is a quadriplegic who spent most of his youth in an iron lung. A portable respirator now makes it possible for him to function outside of the iron lung during the day.

Truex earned a BA in business administration from Taylor with high honor and a MS in computer science from Ball State University.

Currently, he serves on the University Advancement staff writing grant proposals and providing technical services in public relations. He also writes for Taylor magazine.

Both Taylor and Ball State have honored Truex with achievement awards.

Project puts Taylor on tape

Student life at Taylor is being captured on videotape for a project co-sponsored by university admissions and university advancement.

The project, which is being produced in conjunction with Video Image Productions (VIP) of Siloam Springs, Ark., will yield two 8-10 minute videos for use by admissions for recruitment and by university advancement for public relations.

Although each video will have a different focus in terms of constituency, both videos will focus on Taylor's spiritual, academic and community tradition and will feature informal conversations with President Jay Kesler.

Both videos should be completed sometime early next year.

Oxford professor joins summer faculty

Dr. E. David Cook, professor of philosophy at Oxford University, joined Taylor's faculty this summer as a visiting professor.

He conducted two classes which dealt with ethical decision making concerning the moral choices of our society.

Bio-medical ethics, rationality and religion were among the topics Cook discussed in the lectures for both students and faculty.

Cook has written nine books. His most recent are Christian Ethics, Questions and Answers and Cultural Relativism. He is a Fellow and Chaplain of Green College and serves as Dean of Studies at the Oxford Centre for Mission Studies.

Spiritual renewal week centers on sojourners

Earl Palmer, minister of the First Presbyterian Church in Berkeley, California, and Jay Kesler, Taylor's president since 1984, were the featured speakers at Taylor's fall Spiritual Renewal Week services.

Palmer used the theme "A durable faith for today's sojourner," while Kesler complemented that theme with an analogy to Robert Frost's poem, "The road not taken."

According to Palmer, his love for students led him to use the concept of a sojourner as the theme for his addresses.

"I have a long-standing respect for students," said Palmer, whose church is located near USC-Berkeley. "They are at a key time in life for weighing ideas and determining values. As students, they're concerned about the need to stay focused."

Kesler addresses marriage, family, in new book

Many couples in the Church, today, are seeing relationships crumble and end in divorce. Is there a way to defy the growing statistics? Jay Kesler believes so—if Christ becomes the center of the marriage.

In his most recent book, tentatively titled Let's try harder, Kesler argues that, even in modern society, a marriage exercising Christian principles can surmount the forces and pressures that devastate ordinary relationships.

"We don't have to have lives just like the world," Kesler said. "There can be a qualitative difference in Christian marriages."

Kesler maintains that Christianity should not merely be the means by which we allow God to save our souls, but that it should pervade our lives so that it works in marriages, as well.

Faith gives Christians a unique angle on important qualities such as patience, forgiveness and understanding. God gave believers these fruits of the Spirit, points out Kesler, to apply to their lives, not just to satisfy their curiosities.

He uses infidelity as an example. Christians can believe in the healing of painful memories and the forgiveness of an unfaithful spouse, Kesler says, by following the example of the Savior, who has forgiven all sins.

The breakdown of the family, however, has consequences that extend far beyond the home.

Kesler views divorce as a "theological battle" in which Satan is attempting to destroy the foundation on which the Christian faith stands.

According to Kesler, the Bible consistently uses family structure to illustrate God's relationship to mankind: God is represented as a father, Christ as a bridegroom.

By casting a negative light on these illustrations, Kesler writes, Satan diminishes the comfort and love they convey.

"If [the marriage union] is no longer possible, or if the viability of Christian marriage becomes questioned much further, then indeed, the very promises in the Word of God become suspect and people will be unable to put their whole weight down on their faith."

Partners in Christian marriage do have an advantage, stresses President Jay Kesler in Let's try harder, his most recent book.

Kesler makes it clear that this issue goes beyond individual happiness; it cuts to the very marrow of our relationship with Christ and has the potential to change the way our children, and even grandchildren, will perceive God.

Kesler hopes to see his book become available in video and audio tape form for young couples' Sunday school classes, allowing them to see that the power of Christ is relevant to real-life issues.

Let's try harder, Kesler's seventeenth book, is expected in bookstores in January, 1990 as a David C. Cook publication.—JH

High schoolers savor "heart of Taylor"

Junior and senior high school students from as far away as Egypt and Singapore arrived on campus this summer for the tuition-free summer honors program and the Taylor alumni program.

During their five weeks together, students earn six hours of college credit, participate in collegiate activities and experience "dorm life."

The alumni program is open to children of alumni. Applicants to the honors program must meet academic and other requirements.

Tuition is free. Students pay only standard room, board and fee costs. Nevertheless, the university considers the honors and Alumni programs wise investments.

Bill Ringenberg, director of the program, explains, "The major goal is attracting more high quality students to Taylor and therefore, helping admissions. Even to students who don't come [to Taylor after they graduate], it communicates Taylor's message and connotes, in their minds, the academic quality of Taylor."

Ringenberg estimates that half of all honors students return to Taylor as students.

Betty Freese, director of alumni relations, reports that almost 60% of the participants in the alumni program have returned or will return to Taylor as college students.

"Our overall aim is always to let alumni know we consider them a special constituency," Freese says. "They are important to us at Taylor. We, of course, want their support, but this is one of the ways we've chosen to serve alumni: by giving their children special opportunities."

While at Taylor, students in the honors program are required to take the seminar "God, man and society."

Taught by Ringenberg, the course

"Apply your faith to your culture," urges Bill Ringenberg to students at the summer honors conference.

investigates the interrelationship between Christianity and secular culture, examining current issues and major world views.

Ringenberg feels the course is valuable: "It challenges students to seek to apply their Christian faith and knowledge in practical ways and reflect upon the needs of society." He considers the program an "introduction to the heart of Taylor education."

"I saw a very special thing at work in the group," reflects freshman Aaron Kleist. "As we came together, the Spirit of Christ became evident in a variety of ways that I had not experienced with a group of people such as this. From the very start, people reached out to each other, accepted each other and bonded with each other."

R2-D2 look-alike aids teaching staff

A new robot, donated by David VanderMay, joined Taylor's computer science department this summer.

The robot is a model RB5X and features a five-axis arm, speech capability, and mobility through sonar sensors along with touch-sensitive bumpers.

"It looks like R2-D2," says Art White, associate professor of information sciences, "and is almost as friendly."

White describes the robot's capabilities as diverse: it can sing a song, play games, and sound intruder alarms, among other things.

However, the robot did not come for fun and games.

White, who co-instructs the Interterm robotics class, recognizes the value of RB5X as a practical teaching tool.

According to Dr. Timothy Diller, professor of information sciences, donations such as VanderMay's are what put Taylor on the cutting edge of artificial intelligence.

VanderMay, who attended Taylor for one year in 1964, was the keynote speaker at the International Conference for Computers and Missions (ICCM) at Taylor this summer.

Grant monies to fund variety of programs

The Pew Memorial Trust granted a second $1.8 million to the Christian College Consortium, of which Taylor is a member.

Taylor expects to receive approximately $100,000 over the next three years for various programs addressing minority faculty development, international education, foreign language study and ethics studies.

Marsha (Elkund '64) Geddes resides with her husband Dave '65 in Wheaton, Illinois. She celebrated her 25 year class reunion this fall.

If you can't go home, why do they call it homecoming?

When I was a student at Taylor, there was one thing I was certain about—I was never going to be old enough to attend a 25 year class reunion! No way! I wasn't going to become one of those gray haired, dottering folks who went about exclaiming, "Well, when I was a student here we had to wash our clothes in a stream and dry them on rocks."

So just how did I explain that my husband Dave and I were traveling back from the "real world" to return to Upland for Homecoming and a 25 year class reunion?

What a comfort to find that the road to and from the "real world" is still only two lanes. When you turn onto the campus, however, several things are immediately apparent—namely buildings and cars.

You quickly discover that all the buildings you knew in the early 60's have either been bricked over or are memorialized by a marble plaque. The amazing thing is that the new buildings are all named after people you knew! Just who were Magee? Campbell? Wisconsin? Swallow or Robin?

But, Odle, Rediger, Nussbaum, Haakonsen! I have vivid memories of those people. How many cases of "postnasal drip" did Mrs. Haakonsen diagnose for me in my four years? And everyone has memories of Coach Odle yelling "weave!"

The building I find most fitting is Olson Residence Hall. It is the most appropriate thing I can imagine—a dormitory named for Miss Olson. In the years I was a student at Taylor, I think that the only classroom Miss Olson ever taught in was that cavern in the basement of Wisconsin dorm that was euphemistically called "Wisconsin lounge."

The acoustics were terrible in that room. I remember Miss Olson had a unique teaching method for maintaining silence in the classroom: a tiny voice that forced us to be extremely quiet in order to hear. She had a tendency to call on people to answer questions. She also had an uncanny sense of just which student was not prepared to answer the question.

The laundry room for the entire dorm was on the other side of the classroom wall. Why did it always seem as though the entire dorm decided to do laundry during the class session before an exam? Just as Miss Olson started telling us how to study, two washers shifted into rinse cycle, another started to spin dry, a fourth went into wash, and someone yelled, "Quick, get a mop, a washer is overflowing." In the process, Adrien Chandler is crowned 1961 Homecoming queen as Joan McIntosh and Jeannie Wills watch.

Students like Dave Geddes '61 can name the make, model and owner of each car on campus in the four years they were at Taylor.

Miss Olson's study helps would be drowned out.

The other major difference is cars and parking lots. We actually had to drive around a while to find a parking spot. To this day, Dave can still recite the entire student population owning cars in the four years he was a student, including the year, make and color of the cars.

To have been a student at Taylor during the '60's is to understand time travel. You arrived in Upland and became enveloped in an environment that had little contact with the outside world.

Television sets were almost nonexistent on campus, and, for the most part, the only thing you could see on those black and white screens was something akin to a blizzard.

We listened to the radio for contact with the outside world. Our choices were WOWO in Fort Wayne where the morning program started out from the "little red barn" and a station in Marion where our classmate, Toby Mort, played Hawaiian music on Saturdays.

Since we had few options for leaving campus and not many places to go even if we had wheels, we got to know each other.

During the intervening years, we have found that when our paths cross with alumni from our student years, it doesn't take long to become friends, even if we had not known each other well during our campus days. We share the same memories.

One of the major problems with returning to campus today after such a long absence, is where do you go to find other returning alumni? Without Campbell parlors, we were at a loss. The cornfield has been replaced by many buildings where alumni might be congregating.

Dave and I wandered about haphazardly from building to building Saturday morning. But, we learned one secret to finding our classmates.

Those of us who graduated in the 60's still return to campus dressed for Sunday dinner. (Dining hall rules specified coats and ties for men, dresses and heels for women). I guess we return expecting Miss Kesler to frown if we aren't properly attired. Dave and I soon found ourselves looking for likely clothes about campus, then we searched our memories to identify the face.

We thoroughly enjoyed our time back on campus, remembering how it was when we were students and just catching up on the 25 years since we last met.

Why did I return for my 25 year reunion? I prefer to think of it this way: I went out and got myself a new "Sunday dress," polished my bifocals, and prepared for time travel. I'm not old enough for a 25 year reunion—I went "back to the future!" —MG

In 1963, MCW was easily visible through the windows of the "bubble"—then dining hall, now student union.

Reade,
president,
1893-1902

Original gift goes on giving

Taylor's first donor was William Rockhill, an early settler of Fort Wayne. Rockhill was born in Burlington, New Jersey where he received his education.

At age 29, he moved to Fort Wayne, Indiana where he and members of his family accumulated large tracts of land.

Rockhill enjoyed a distinguished career in public service. He served as one of the first commissioners of Allen county, city assessor, and in the city council, state legislature and U.S. Congress.

He was an active layman and member of the Presbyterian church.

Rockhill was a pioneer in public education. He established the city's public school system and in 1846 chaired the first public meeting to discuss the establishment of a new college in Fort Wayne.

Elected chairman of the building committee for the new college, Rockhill donated the land upon which the Fort Wayne Female Collegiate Institute, now Taylor University, was built.

Rockhill served the university in various capacities, including chairman of the board of trustees, until his death on January 15, 1865.

Taylor's first donor was a pioneer in education. The gift he made in 1846 continues to affect the lives of young people.

President willing to sacrifice self

Thaddeus C. Reade accepted the presidency of Taylor University in the summer of 1891, while the school was still located in Fort Wayne. In 1893, he supervised the removal of the college from that city to Upland, assuming all burdens and responsibilities of that move.

Throughout the ensuing years, heavy burdens and responsibilities gradually took their toll on the president's health, which had never been robust.

In the spring of 1902, with his health failing, Reade visited the Battle Creek (MI) Health Sanitarium. Shortly after his arrival, while resting in his room, the dormitory caught on fire, engulfing the building in flames and smoke.

After making his way to safety, he realized that many people were trapped in the building due to excessive smoke.

Ignoring his own physical condition, Reade returned again and again to the building, rescuing many people and leading them to safety. Newspaper accounts indicate he rescued at least 30 people.

The heroism he displayed may have further weakened his health. After returning to Upland, his health deteriorated rapidly and he died a few months later.

When fire engulfed the building, President Thaddeus Reade endangered his life and sacrificed his health to help others.

Group preserves university's mission

At the beginning of the 1923 school year, Taylor's financial situation was critical. Something had to be done to stabilize the university's financial condition, catch up on overdue bills and ensure the survival of the school.

Accordingly, President John Paul organized the Legal Hundred, borrowing the concept and name from the group John Wesley formed to hold and administer the property of British Methodism.

At commencement, in June, 1924, Taylor's charter was revised to make the Legal Hundred, a board of individuals not to number more than 100, custodian of all property and business affairs of the university.

The school's charter continued to administer education and confer degrees. Steps were taken to ensure that the doctrinal focus and mission of the university would remain unchanged.

The Legal Hundred owned and governed the university until 1933.

The efforts of the Legal Hundred allowed Taylor to remain financially solvent, while protecting her evangelical mission.

Last-second effort clinches title

The trophy that Coach Don Odle's team brought home from the 1962 Marshall (MI) Optimist Basketball Classic was so large, the trophy case had to be rebuilt. To win the trophy, the Trojans trounced Central Michigan University, 101 to 82.

Three years later, the two teams met again in the title match. This time, CMU was favored to win.

Just before the tournament, the local paper reported about Taylor's team, "One thing is certain: this team will get more than its share of shots at the basket and will keep the game moving at a high rate of speed. Dillon, Bocken, Wilson, and Harvey can score the points. Ability to win the title hinges on the strength of the big boys to dig out the ball and get it moving."

The game got underway and turned into a see-saw battle. It remained that way, right down to the final gun. The score was tied at 69. There was one second left on the clock. Taylor's Larry Harvey had the ball under the Taylor basket.

He let go with a long arching shot. The final gun sounded. The ball never touched the backboard. It sailed down the floor and swished into the basket. The winning goal counted. Taylor won the Classic and the championship trophy once again.

"The most exciting sports moment of my life," some say, remembering Larry Harvey's last-second shot.

TAYLOR CHRISTIAN LIFE
CONFERENCE

Conference offers something for all ages

President Jay Kesler was the keynote speaker at the 1989 Taylor Christian Life Conference, which was held on campus June 30-July 2, 1989. More than 150 persons attended the weekend conference designed to promote spiritual growth and renewal. Besides activities for all age groups, the conference featured a series of workshops for adults on Christian growth and development.

This summer, children in kindergarten through grade 6 were fascinated by ventriloquist Murl Eastman '50. Bill Shewan, executive director of North Central Indiana Youth for Christ, was the guest speaker for the teen section of the conference.

The next Taylor Christian Life Conference will be held from June 29-July 1, 1990 and will feature Kesler as the keynote speaker. Christine Wyrzten, noted concert artist and speaker, will host workshops and present a concert during the weekend.—AC

President Jay Kesler

President

It only takes a spark..." immediately evokes memories in the minds of the "over forty" set. We recognize it as the opening line of a quiet chorus, usually sung while holding hands to the accompaniment of acoustical guitar. It was the evangelical version of "We shall overcome" in the troubled 60s. Christian youth longed for a revival that would result in a better world, not through political revolution, but by the powerful working of God's love in the lives of individuals.

Looking for light

The Woodstock generation sought peace, freedom and love in the private expression of personal desires, uninhibited and unrestrained by establishment prohibitions. Christian youth argued that, without the guiding presence of Christ and the word of God, even well-intentioned motives would eventually lead to the selfish satisfaction of personal appetites rather than the promised utopia. The recent obituary of Abbie Hoffman was, for many, the death rattle of the hippie movement and the naive idealisms of the 60s. The "me" generation reigns supreme without the dreams of world community and endless love making while racism is alive and well in many pockets of land. Predictably, as noted by almost all social commentators, the cult of the individual has been institutionalized, even to the privatization of religion, until concern for others and the welfare of society is waning.

It only takes a spark...

We have chosen "it only takes a spark..." as the title of this issue of the Taylor magazine to rekindle the truth that, though misdirected energies can lead to ruin, the central truth of the Christian community is stubbornly valid. Individuals can make a difference! "It only takes a spark to get a fire going, and soon all those around can warm up to its glowing...that's how it is with God's love once you've experience it, you've got to pass it on...."

You might legitimately ask of your president: "What kind of fire do you have in mind for Taylor University?" My vision is for a "light on a hill for all to see," a beacon fire in a dark world. Those who light candles always make a greater difference than those who curse the darkness.

For Taylor University, the light is not education alone. Education that leaves out the creator and the central figure of human history is, however well financed and intentioned, destined to eventual twilight and darkness. When we Christians insist that Jesus is the light of the world, we are not simply professing admiration for a heroic life, tragic death and noble resolves. We actually believe that He is the son of God and that ultimate truth is revealed in Him. All truth really is God's truth and there are no sacred-secular distinctions.

Preparation for enlightened service

Taylor must not be a light under a basket or a warming place for a few committed pilgrims, huddled together, awaiting eventual envelopment by the darkening chill. We must continue to be obedient to the vision of preparing young people for enlightened service in a dark and needy world: thousands of lights, each, in their own way, dispelling darkness wherever it destroys individuals or culture.

The fire at Taylor has always been fueled and tended by relatively ordinary people who, united together, have developed a significant Christian college. My vision longs for the day when the word "Christian" before the word "college" will mean more, not less, to a watching, often cynical secular world.

A brightening glow

This issue documents the brightening glow of our progress in this endeavor. It is about the hundreds of contributions of ordinary persons, vital to the realization of a vision of greatness. It is intended to provide information, inspiration, credit and thanksgiving.

We also ask the questions "Who shall sustain the fire in the future? How shall it grow for the watching world to see and take notice? What is the critical fuel most needed for the future?"

My assessment is that our greatest need is for the financial resources to expand the university endowment to provide assistance to worthy students, regardless of their financial circumstances, and to undergird the faculty with adequate supports to achieve excellence in scholarship and teaching. When we have completed phase II of the fine arts building and have renovated the few historic buildings on campus, all of our energies must be marshalled to this task.

My confident belief is that God has indeed raised up Taylor to be a "light on a hill" and has trusted her future brightness to all of us who share the vision.

This issue of the Taylor magazine expresses gratitude to those who have substantial resources and have shared generously and largely. In harmony with the heart of Christ, we are also saying thank you to those who have relatively little, but have shared what they have as well.

A fire on a hill

The result is that the fire is growing!! Somewhere, there may be those of personal insight or deep biblical conviction who believe in long range leadership development through Christian education who, with very large resources, will ignite the dreams beyond our present imagination. We pray daily that this is so, but at present, we will be faithful, we will continue to be self critical and improve and we will continue to challenge one another to be even brighter: a fire on a hill.

The twin spires of the Rice bell tower symbolize Taylor's commitment to integrate faith and learning.

Daryl Yost, provost/executive vice president

Provost/ Executive Vice

In his article summarizing a research project sponsored by the Carnegie Foundation, Dr. Ernest Boyer indicated sixty percent of first time freshmen make their choice of college on the basis of the physical facilities available and the condition of these facilities.

That is a significant fact as consideration is given to priorities for Taylor University, especially as it relates to a stable enrollment.

On first impressions

Often, one develops an opinion on first impressions. As one walks or drives around the campus, it is easy to see the improvements manifested in new sidewalks, flower beds, painting, landscaping around buildings, standardized external lighting throughout the campus, in paving and many other less noticeable items.

Of buildings and beginnings

In addition to these noted improvements, this past year, the University made an effort to improve its "best foot forward" in welcoming people to campus by establishing the Helena Memorial Hall as the offices for admissions, the president and the provost/executive vice president.

As one of the oldest buildings on campus, it has become the center for many exciting beginnings. Helena Memorial Hall was renovated to accommodate these services after a devastating fire in August, 1986. It has proven to be a wise decision and should be considered in regarding the preservation of older buildings on the campus.

Even though Bergwall Hall opened in the fall of 1989, the majority of the construction took place during the 1988-89 fiscal year. Due to a sincere desire to honor Taylor's commitment to have a resident campus, the Board of Trustees authorized the construction of this new facility. The facility has 78 student rooms. During the 1989-90 school year, there are 20 three-person rooms, representing a total of 176 students.

Each room is furnished with its own bathroom and independent heating/air conditioning capability. The entire facility was furnished with new furniture and equipment. It will serve the University well for the next fifty years.

On planning for the future

As the university considers its future, considerable effort is being put forth to make provisions for replacement of equipment, especially those items which have a tendency to become obsolete quickly; e.g. computers. It is also important that residence hall and classroom equipment be kept up-to-date and safe. Each vice president is responsible to assure this for the future as the budget is prepared each year. Significant progress was made during the 1988-89 school year. This is a part of the administration's plan to make the University a financially sound institution.

Of assets and enthusiasm

The provost/executive vice president strives for stability and compatibility—two important ingredients in a strong management team. There has been enormous growth and maturity during 1988-89 in the senior administration. This has enabled the administration to tackle some critical issues and bring them to resolution. This strength in the administrative team is one of the University's greatest assets. It will continue to improve during 1989-90. Reports from senior officers do reflect and also support this fact.

Taylor University is your institution. You are encouraged to come to the campus and enjoy the spirit of enthusiasm that is so present. Your comments, observations and concerns are welcome.

Bergwall Hall, Taylor's newest residence hall, represents Taylor's commitment to a resident campus.

Richard Stanislaw, vice president for academic affairs

Academic affairs

Unlike the state multiversity, Taylor University does not define education simply as a "cafeteria of information and useful skills." Rather, Taylor is what Robert Bellah describes as a voice crying for development of the total individual.

Reaffirming the role of education

In his book, Habits of the heart, Bellah observes "while our universities are under greater pressure than ever to emphasize pragmatic results—technological achievements and career oriented skills—there are voices calling for a reaffirmation of the classic role of education...so that individuals become more fully developed people and citizens of a free society."

Acquiring more than skills

Taylor administration and faculty are committed to providing a place for students to acquire knowledge of God, others, the universe and human place and purpose.

Programs encourage growth in the individual discipline, the integration of faith and learning, and the broader integration of the total liberal arts.

Fulfilling the mission

Each year, Taylor faculty make vital contributions in achieving university goals and strengthening curricular programs for the education of students. Through their efforts, the faculty demonstrates a concern for academic enrichment and sensitivity to student needs.

Sampling the diversity

The following selection of programs is only a sample of the many ways in which faculty are fulfilling the mission of the university.

Art professor, Craig Moore directed Taylor's efforts in acquiring three art pieces from Chicago Sculptures, as well as several other art pieces. This "art on campus" was noted in a major New York publication, Art in America.

The first student teacher to teach abroad was at Rift Valley Academy, Kijabe, Kenya this fall.

The English department added a new major in English (writing), while the history department began development of an international, cross-disciplinary major and title changes in the music department produced three new degrees.

Taylor was recognized by NACADA, the national advising professional organization and Dwight Mikkelsen was named to receive a national faculty advisor recognition award.

Whether on-campus, in emphasizing the quality of the collection at the Zondervan library, or through off-campus academic experiences abroad, Taylor faculty continue to reaffirm their commitment to the classic role of education.

Writing major adds diversity

Last semester, the English department added a bachelor of arts in English (writing) to its list of degree programs.

The program, which was implemented because of increased student interest, will feature more writing courses than the literature and teaching programs presently include.

Approximately 9 to 12 students are currently enrolled in the writing major program and more are expected to join next year.

"We have a number of students who have an interest in writing but don't know what they want to do," said Dr. William Fry, head of the English department. "They don't feel comfortable with journalism and business writing, but they do want to study writing for publication or graduate study."

While the other bachelor of arts degree has a two-thirds emphasis in literature, the new one is specifically geared toward writing.

"Traditionally, the English department has given two degrees," according to Fry. "One is the bachelor of science for teaching and the other is the bachelor of arts for writing and literature with an emphasis in literature."

To develop the curriculum for the new major, the department re-packaged courses already in the curriculum and added one new course in free-lance writing.

Oxford influence: E. David Cook joined the faculty this summer as a visiting professor from Oxford University, England.

Places in the heart: Researchers at Taylor identified the location of fat pads in animal hearts that have a regulatory effect on heart rate, conduction time, and contractive force. At work with Dr. Walter Randall (far right) are Tim Kroeker '91 and Kurt Hotmire '91; Dr. Tim Burkholder and Kevin Bluemel '91 are not pictured.

Neuhouse cited for teaching excellence

David Neuhouse, professor of mathematics, was recently awarded the Sears-Roebuck Award for Teaching Excellence and Campus Leadership for the 1989-90 academic year.

According to Ken Swan, professor of English, the award, which is worth a total of $2,500, was given to Neuhouse on the basis of his "many years of meritorious teaching and servant leadership at Taylor University."

Neuhouse has been instrumental in attracting students to the campus, one of the stipulations of the award.

David Neuhouse

Allan Smith, chief financial officer

Business and finance

The financial condition of Taylor University continues to improve in 1988-89. As of June 30, 1989, Taylor had total assets of $47.7 million, an increase of 13% over 1987-88. The operating budget for 1988-89 was 421.4 million, also an increase of 13% over 1987-88.

New residence hall

During 1988-89, the bond financing for the construction of Bergwall Hall, a new four floor residence hall, was completed. This facility was financed with economic development bonds through the Upland, Indiana Economic Development Commission.

Stewardship opportunities

Taylor's strong enrollment has enabled some important acts of stewardship this year. Debt on the library was further reduced by $300,000 and up reserves of $700,00 have been set up for facilities and equipment replacement and repair. These actions, on the part of the Taylor administration, continue to strengthen our financial base.

Growing enrollment, growing needs

The bookstore, food center and business office have all taken steps to better and more efficiently serve the burgeoning student population.

With the addition of computerized text management, the Bookstore personnel will become more efficient in the important tasks of ordering, taking inventory, and selling needed materials. This will provide Bob Neideck, manager, and his staff with better information to serve students, faculty, and staff.

Serving hours in the Hodson Dining Commons have been extended to reduce the lines and give the students more flexibility in their schedules. New salad bars, condiment bars and beverage service have been installed. Another new feature, the deli bar, has been very positively received by the students.

The business office has just completed the installation of a new management system for processing and reporting all financial data. Managers feel this will give them better data to help make better financial decisions.

Together, these changes will help the Business office and auxiliary services better serve the institution and its constituents.

Information services

The use of technology is growing by leaps and bounds at Taylor. The campus is exploring innovative ways to achieve better communication, instruction, decision making and future planning. The information services department (INS) helps make these advances possible.

The many people within INS—repair technicians, software specialists and programmers, computer operators, secretarial staff and managers—are dedicated to helping the university use high-tech tools effectively and efficiently.

Making connections

From more efficient handling of telephone calls to the reception of Ball State's televised MBA program, new and updated electronic communication systems, installed by INS, have benefited the Taylor community. Other changes are coming soon, including a satellite receiving dish that will allow reception of foreign language programming from around the world.

Aiding teaching and learning

In today's information age, merging computer technology into the curriculum is important in the success of our graduates. Supporting the use of computers in academics is a high priority for INS. This year, services provided by INS have provided 50% more processing power for teaching in computer languages and statistical analysis, an enhanced computer literacy program and better grade information and reporting for faculty.

Serving the Servants

As our administrative departments strive to keep up with increasing enrollment, make good decisions and provide services to students and alumni, the administrative computer system needs to keep pace with these changes. INS plays an important role in this process, evidenced this year in the projects completed for the financial aid and business offices.

Enabling the Future

To be fiscally responsible and plan for ongoing excellence of existing program and services, INS has been instrumental in encouraging the establishment of a replacement fund for high-tech equipment. Few colleges have developed such policies to assure lasting computing resources over time.

The role of INS is to support and facilitate these innovations and assess new technologies for the future.

New computers, software enhance lab

Students enrolled in required computer literacy courses will be using new and up-to-date computers and software this year.

Information services ordered and installed new computers, printers and software in the Reade Center's instructional computing lab over the summer.

Using the new equipment, students will have the opportunity to learn and use microcomputer software packages such as WordPerfect and Lotus 1-2-3, which will help in writing papers, creating graphs, performing calculations, and printing results.

The lab can be used by both computer literacy and introductory computer science students. Students not enrolled in these courses may use the equipment to write papers and complete other class assignments.

New equipment in the computer literacy lab gives students an added edge in today's information age.

Planning, research benefits campus

Taylor's Information services department recently expanded its role to include an office of institutional research and planning.

According to Robert Hodge, chief information officer and currently director of the research office, unanswered questions such as "Who are Taylor's competitors and peers? Which colleges have characteristics to which Taylor aspires?" and many others have been the incentive for establishing the office.

Hodge is directing the program, which includes applied research to answer specific questions, evaluation of quantitative and qualitative information underlying periodic or ad hoc review, judgements of efficiency and effectiveness, identification of needs, and leadership to facilitate the goals of the university.

Research results are already being put to use, enhancing decision-making processes.

Making connections: INS technicians service the phone cables which keep the campus in touch.

Wynn Lembright, vice president for student affairs and services

Student affairs and services

Providing out-of-class development opportunities and delivering student services is a major undertaking. In accomplishing this task, the office of student development and services touches nearly every aspect of the university's mission and student life.

Admissions

Nationally, many colleges are experiencing a shortage of applicants. Taylor, however, is experiencing the opposite phenomena. Incoming freshman numbered 484 this year, selected from a record number 9000 inquiries and 1400 applications.

Taylor is committed to the recruitment and retention of minority students. A $159,000 grant from Lily Endowment, received for this purpose, will significantly affect the goal of attracting minority students to Taylor.

Athletics

Athletics form part of the well-rounded education available to students. Taylor sponsors 14 intercollegiate sports, eight for men and four for women. Men compete in the newly-formed Indiana Collegiate Athletic Conference (ICAC) and women in the newly-formed Indiana Conference for Women (HCW). Taylor's football, women's volleyball, both men and women's cross country and soccer, and men's basketball teams posted impressive accomplishments last year.

Financial aid

The cost of a Taylor education must be matched by a concern for it being affordable. In the last five years, tuition has increased 57%. During the same time, however, Taylor nearly doubled the amount of institutional dollars committed to helping students achieve a Taylor education from $1,335,194 to $2,233,718.

Student development

The offices and programs of student development provide fertile ground for a student's sense of belonging and growth.

Well over 1000 students are involved in various ministry leadership programs. Opportunities abound, including mission trips, evangelistic and outreach programs, youth conference, leadership of small group Bible studies, offices in student government and leadership positions in the residence halls.

A cooperative effort

The effective but often unnoticed efforts of our campus safety office, new student orientation program, health center and committees dealing with the AIDs issue and wellness reflect the cooperative effort required to meet the total needs of students.

Bergwall Hall offers students "high class" accommodations.

Record enrollment finds escape valve

Bergwall Hall is Taylor's newest residence hall. It features, among other things, a bathroom and air conditioner in each of the seventy-eight rooms. "High class," students call it. Denise Bakerink, however, uses a different term: "An escape valve," she says. Bakerink is director of housing and welcomes the new hall as a partial solution to the need for more student housing brought about by the unprecedented size of Taylor's enrollment.

Bergwall Hall is designed for 156 students. This year, however, 20 rooms each house three persons, for a total of 175 residents.

Another year of record enrollment and Taylor's unusually high student retention rate are not the only reasons the new residence hall was dedicated October 27. The building is "a major step towards confirming Taylor's on-campus residence life program in the face of increasing enrollment," says Dean of Students, Walt Campbell.

The building is named for Dr. Evan Bergwall, president of Taylor University from 1951-1959. According to Provost Daryl Yost, this name was selected because "Bergwall and his wife represent the mission of Taylor University, which is to develop men and women who are Christ-like and able to function in the real world."

Bergwall's years were critical ones for Taylor and the Board of Trustees felt his name needed to be preserved for future students.

Resume service offered

Taylor alumni and current students are already benefiting from a new computerized resume service sponsored by the Offices of career development and alumni relations.

Participants may have their resumes screened by employers across the country. There is no charge for this service.

Those interested in more information about this, or other career development programs, may contact Tim Nace at the Office of career development, Taylor University, Upland, IN 46953, (317) 998-5384.

Soft touch: Matt Widdoes '91 crosses the goal line for the two-point conversion, despite the efforts of his Anderson University opponent. Taylor won the game.

A glowing candle serves as a reminder of the significance of each gift to the Taylor Fund.

It only takes a spark...

Giving report

"It only takes a spark..." is the theme of this year's giving report. Taken from the familiar gospel chorus, this theme is intended to underscore the point, "It only takes a spark to get a fire going."

We believe the generous increase in giving to Taylor by many alumni, friends, businesses, and foundations is symbolized in this musical line.

Just four short years ago, Jay Kesler came to Taylor as president and articulated a vision.

That vision involved building on Taylor's reputation as a respected, Christian college and moving the university to a new level of greatness: greatness, not defined as fame or prestige, but rather, in terms of worldwide influence for the kingdom of God.

Taylor's historical roots have been a tradition of academic excellence and depth of Christian commitment since 1846. The president, building on this heritage, is now seeking to position Taylor as a key center for the development of leadership for the Lord's work around the globe.

Jay's vision, as with any great dream, needs resources. As a result, we have turned to our many friends for support. The response has been overwhelming. It started with a few sparks, but now, a fire is going. Evidence of this outpouring of support can be found in the lists of the many names which follow.

As you see your name listed and the names of others, please be assured of our deepest gratitude for your gifts.

The Fire Is Going

Just three years ago, the honor roll of donors could be contained in five pages. This year's list of names of those supporting Taylor represents 29 pages of this magazine. But the measure of success is not simply many donors. These donors have also increased their generosity. As a result, we can report several noteworthy achievements made possible by your gifts to Taylor.

- Total giving to Taylor was up 30% for 88-89, exceeding $3 million for only the third time in our history.
- Alumni participation in giving moved from under 20% to over 33% this past year.

- Overall giving to the Taylor Fund approximated $1 million for the second year in a row.
- Parents' giving increased by 40%.
- The Church Matching Program for student aid brought in $119,626 in its third year; 187 students benefited from this program with 147 churches participating.
- Planned and estate gifts for the past two years have exceeded $2 million.
- Multiple faculty grants have been received.
- A grant of $500,000 was received from a foundation, tying the record for the largest grant ever received by Taylor University.
- Matching gifts from alumni and friends working for matching gift companies increased by 15%.
- The number of Presidents Associates ($1,000 and above donors) moved from 278 to 330.

*Chip Jagers,
vice president
for advancement*

This past year, like the previous year, was one of some controversy among Christian organizations in the area of fund raising. Support for a number of ministries declined. Despite such difficulties, we are pleased to report that giving to Taylor University continues to increase at unprecedented levels. Feedback from our alumni and friends suggests the reason is their belief in the integrity of Taylor University, their respect for the Christ-centered quality of a Taylor education, and their appreciation for the stewardship demonstrated by the institution over the years.

This past year, we saw continued concern expressed by charities over the tax law changes of 1986. Many had predicted an ongoing decline in charitable giving as a result. Again, this was not true at Taylor University. Gifts to the college have increased during this period of tax reform.

In the area of ethics, Taylor University has maintained a strong stance in fund raising and other financial areas. Taylor is a charter member of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability (ECFA), joining as a founding member in 1979.

"Light and Faith." That has been the Latin motto of Taylor University since 1846. It is the sincere desire of the faculty, students, administration, and trustees of Taylor that we carry on the mission of being a light in a world of need. To achieve such a noble goal takes resources to sustain and strengthen the effort. During the 1988-89 school year we witnessed another tremendous outpouring of gifts. You were a significant part of a generous giving year. Consistent with our theme, each gift was appreciated regardless of size. Celebrate, with us, this excellent giving report.

Thank you.

President's Associates

As alumni, parents, and friends of Taylor University, you are the President's Associates, the ones who stand in the gap to provide the moral and financial support Taylor needs to stand strong.

Continuing the 150-year Taylor tradition into the 21st century, you perpetuate your life ideals and values to tomorrow's leaders, making a lasting statement in a transitory world.

You recognize the value of a Taylor education and wish to make it possible for future generations. Without your assistance, each student's tuition would increase significantly. Your gifts to the Taylor Fund bridge the gap between the cost of tuition and the actual cost of a Taylor education.

Your loyalty is crucial to building and maintaining a strong institution. Thank you.

President Jay Kesler

The Taylor Fund, comprised of unrestricted annual gifts, covers costs not passed on to students. As such, your gift to the Taylor Fund is significant in training and educating tomorrow's leaders.

Taylor Fund

As a member of the Taylor family, please accept our warm thanks for your support of the Taylor Fund during the 1988-89 giving year. Through your gifts and encouraging support, you play a significant role in all that happens at Taylor University.

Whether as a graduate, friend of the university, parent of a Taylor student, or in some other way a believer in what Taylor stands for, you are part of the team who is making a difference in Christian higher education.

Alumni giving continued at a high level this year, with an overall participation rate of 33 percent—the second highest in Taylor's history. The average alumnus gift climbed to $108 as many alumni responded to the National Alumni Council phonathon.

Friends of the university continue to play a significant and much appreciated role, as well.

Parents increased their giving this year by 40 percent, an overwhelming expression of generosity and support!

On the pages that follow, you'll find listed contributors to Taylor University. Thank you for your commitment to Taylor University this past year!—CJ Partnership in the Tower Club is based upon an unrestricted annual gift of $500- $999.

Tower Club

The twin towers of our Rice Bell Tower symbolize Taylor's commitment to integrate faith and learning. As members of the Tower Club, you share in this mission.

Today, your support of the Taylor Fund touches the lives of students who, in turn, will tomorrow provide leadership and vision in countless occupations, touching lives across the globe.

To them, caring means sharing

Serving others is an important way of life on Taylor's campus. And it's something students see in the lives of faculty and staff.

From classroom teacher to campus safety officer, from night-shift housekeeper to provost, employment at Taylor means involvement in ministry.

Not content with paid service alone, many faculty and staff members serve their communities in a variety of ways.

Throughout this giving report, you'll find a sampling of the many ways in which Taylor employees put their faith into action, spreading the light of Christ into the world.

Reaching out around the world

Dale Sloat, director of marketing and media services and part-time instructor, together with his wife Bonnie served over 20 years on the mission field.

His understanding of the need for contact between missionary parents and their stateside students and the need for an missionary kid (MK) support-orientation system has resulted in a burgeoning network called Mu Kappa International.

Not just a church nor college group, Mu Kappa (first chartered at Taylor) pursues a multi-faceted approach to the needs of students who have an international view.

"The motivation for Bonnie and me comes from the potential that Mu Kappa provides as a vehicle bringing an unusual combination of resources together," says Dale. "Our campus, our people at Taylor, and our international students form an international equation helping families all over the world." He concludes, "Taylor has historically encouraged visionaries and we're grateful that donations to Mu Kappa multiply the result of our efforts!"

Dale Sloat maintains an international perspective.

Coach continues winning service

George Glass '58 has enjoyed a long and stellar career as a coach, professor, athletic director and department chair at Taylor.

That, combined with his personal warmth and steadfast example of Christian leadership, has made him a role model for generations.

These attributes and abilities also make George a natural choice to be associate vice president for alumni and institutional relations, his current position at Taylor. His many efforts continue to win friends for Taylor.

He assists other institutions, too. George now serves as president of the Eastbrook Dollars for Scholars program, secretary of the Marion Rotary Club, and member of the Upland Chamber of Commerce, Marion-Grant County Chamber of Commerce, and Ambassadors Club (an arm of the Marion Chamber of Commerce).

"I've always enjoyed contacts with Taylor students and our Taylor constituency," he says, "but I also appreciate the opportunities to meet and work with local people." George adds, "Our community means a great deal to me and I love to see people of differing ages with varied interests helping each other."

George Glass combines leadership and love for people in service to his community.

Martha Brane and Joe Romine make their voices heard in community policy.

Public office offers challenges, rewards

Martha Brane, admissions clerk, and Joe Romine '70, athletic director, serve their communities as town council members.

"I was elected in 1982," Martha remembers. "My community needed more people willing to make a commitment. It has been a very positive experience, partly because I enjoy new challenges and partly because we've accomplished so much."

A new sewage system, a new water tower, and plans for further municipal development attest to her words.

Joe currently serves as vice president of his town council. He's contributed eight years as a volunteer fireman and six years as an emergency medical technician (EMT). "I see a responsibility to my community and I accept it," says Joe.

Time to serve, sing

Richard "Dick" Stanislaw is vice president for academic affairs, dean of the university, and professor of music. He's also a modern-day renaissance man.

Dick regularly contributes to various publications, including Christianity Today, and actively participates in such national organizations as the American Choral Directors Association. He also thrives on community pursuits.

Dick serves as director of the fifty-member Blackford Community Choir, a purely volunteer endeavor.

Each summer, the choir performs for the local Heritage Days. As this year marked the town's sesquicentennial, Dick researched and arranged several 150-year-old selections of American music for the group.

December marks another busy time of year for the group. In the past, they have performed with the likes of the Marion Philharmonic Orchestra and the Taylor orchestra.

Loving the unloved

John Wallace, associate professor of social work, is almost a social work department on two legs. Besides solid academic credentials, he has experience as a minister, executive director of residential treatment centers, administrator of educational re-entry services for public schools, public school teacher and deputy sheriff.

John has remained active as consultant, member and leader for several county organizations: the task force on drunk driving, treatment center, court, United Way, Substance Abuse Center, and Big Brothers/Big Sisters.

He now focuses on duties as vice president of the Indiana chapter of the National committee for the prevention of child abuse and as coordinator of the Grant county Child Protection team. "I'm especially involved with the child protection team because," he says, "as a minister and former public school teacher, I know that child abuse is a neglected area."

John Wallace has a heart for children.

Lifesavers: Jerry Stair, Edwin Welch, Steve Olsen.

Helping someone is the reward of service

"A matter of life and death." Although a melodramatic cliché, the phrase nevertheless applies to the community contributions of Steve Olsen '78, telephone system manager, Jerry Stair, maintenance staff, and Edwin Welch, media specialist. They assist the Grant County Emergency Medical Service: Jerry and Edwin as emergency medical technicians (EMTs) and Steve as an ambulance driver.

Steve, who recently received his 10-year award, has spent over 15,000 hours on call and has made more than 460 ambulance runs. "When I graduated from Taylor eleven years ago and accepted a position here," he says, "I felt it was important to participate in some type of community service. Just about that time, a need arose for ambulance drivers and I responded. I still feel good about that decision."

For all three men, the benefits are intangible. Jerry sums it up: "Our reward certainly isn't money because we don't get paid for our hours on call and we get only a nominal amount for actual runs—our reward is just helping someone."

Volunteer service scores big with kids

Each summer, a number of Taylor faculty and staff members venture into the role of youth baseball or softball coach. This year, 13 Taylor faculty and staff members spent hot, humid evenings with unreasonable parents during the midst of a busy summer. One wonders why they do it.

"I got involved initially because my daughters joined the team," says Joe Lund, professor of psychology. "Now, I consider it an opportunity to bridge the gap between Taylor and the community. I also consider it an opportunity to provide a male role model—many of the youngsters come from broken homes without such an influence."

Chuck Stevens, director of alumni programs, adds, "One of the biggest rewards is to see young persons develop a skill in an area not previously marked by success and see the sense of accomplishment on their faces."

Red Cross, 4-H and a busy schedule

Laura Hutson, director of office services, maintains her pleasant composure even while confronting a daunting array of duties including hiring all hourly and some administrative personnel, handling personnel transfers, administering employee benefits, processing purchases, and overseeing property and casualty insurance.

Laura plays down her affiliation with the local Red Cross chapter, barely mentioning how health fairs and blood drives draw on her time.

Her voice takes on a different quality, however, when asked how she spends her one-week summer vacation. The answer has been the same for ten years, but the subject remains a favorite: the Blackford County 4-H Fair.

Laura started as a 4-H club leader when her older son joined 4-H. That was 14 years ago. Before long, she was judging at the fair. For the last three years, she has served as Junior Leader Advisor.

"I started for family reasons, but it's such a good program that I just enjoy it," she beams.

Tim Nace finds satisfaction in reaching out to those in need.

Charting a course for students & community

As implied by his rather imposing title of Associate Dean of Students/Director of Career Development, Tim Nace faces rather imposing responsibilities at Taylor University. He and his staff do nothing less than enable students to chart the educational and vocational paths of their lives.

If a student requests assistance in selecting career objectives and the appropriate major, his group provides it. During their undergraduate years, Tim prepares Taylor students for the job market and then helps them (and recent graduates) enter it.

His service to others also includes the less fortunate, those struggling to contend with the needs of day-to-day life in the world. Tim's service as a United Way board member is primarily focused on his work with the Allocations Committee for the Salvation Army.

"My reward or satisfaction comes from giving back to the community in a way I otherwise couldn't," says Tim.

Serving is a privilege

After twenty years on the Taylor staff, Tom Beers '55 retains a servant attitude and a willingness to shoulder diverse administrative responsibilities which today include associate vice president for advancement.

As part of his community service, Tom has served as president of the board and chairman of the fund raising campaign for the Grant County United Way and as a board member of the Grant County Mental Health Center. Currently, he serves as state director of the Indiana Elderhostel program, second vice president of the Marion YMCA board, and first vice chairman of Grant County United Way's Allocations Committee.

When asked which task he enjoys the most, Tom characteristically replies, "That's hard. It's honestly a privilege to serve at Taylor."

Tom Beers brings a servant's attitude to his work.

Preserving the past

With his unfailing kindness and sense of humor, Dwight Mikkelsen, professor of history and archivist, chortles tolerantly at comments about him living in the past. Like any other outstanding teacher, he brings his subject matter to life—to the delight and benefit of his students.

A faculty member since 1968, Dwight believes "good historians become involved in the historical society of the community where they live."

Putting his words into action, he serves as President of the Blackford County Historical Society, a position he's often held during the last fifteen years. Dwight downplays that service, as well as his contributions to Hartford City's museum and library and his role in publishing a history of the county.

"I have the satisfaction of working with a few persons who are very dedicated to preserving and exhibiting local lore," he says.

Volunteers light the way

National Alumni Council

The National Alumni Council is comprised of 19 volunteers who serve in an advisory capacity in the planning and execution of alumni activities and programs and as liaison to the larger community in the interests of the university.

For the second consecutive year, council members participated in a phone-athon, inviting fellow alumni to join them in pledging to the Taylor Fund.

Accuracy . . .

In a report such as this, although every effort has been made to ensure accuracy, it is inevitable that some omissions and errors will occur. If your name does not appear, or should it be misspelled, please notify the advancement office so that we can correct our error and apologize.

For your clarification, all donors listed in this report gave during the fiscal year which began July 1, 1988 and ended June 30, 1989. Gifts which were postmarked after June 30 will be included in the report for the 1989-90 fiscal year. For tax purposes, the IRS requires that all gifts be applied to the calendar year which appears on the envelope's postmark; as an example, if a check is dated December 1989, but carries a January 1990 postmark, the receipt will be applied to the 1990 tax year.

Parents' Association Cabinet

The Parent's Cabinet is a core of elected members, all parents of current Taylor students, who serve the university in planning and executing activities and as a resource board.

As an advisory panel, rather than a policy-making body, it acts as a liaison between parents and Taylor University.

Cabinet members serve both the student body and the Parent's Association, which they represent.

The Parent's association is an organization including all parents of current students.

The Parent's Association holds three goals: 1) to foster and cultivate the spirit of Christian community among parents 2) to unite that community into a vital force of influence, support and action at Taylor University through effective communication among its members and the institution 3) to have a strong voice in support of the continued spiritual welfare of Taylor University.

Greetings from the Taylor Board...

The Taylor University Board of Trustees serves as the governing policy board of the university, with the ownership of the university actually vested in the corporate board!

When one really considers the implications of such a mandate, the sense of responsibility for the guidance of an institution such as Taylor is indeed profound.

The Taylor Board, I am pleased to report, takes its responsibilities most seriously, and with deep commitment. The twenty-six men and women of the board serve six-year terms at the pleasure of the board. We are constantly on the lookout for prospective board members... people who are first of all committed Christians; people who will work, plan, pray, think, and insofar as resources permit, support the university financially.

The board's primary responsibilities include policy development, responding to the recommendations from the administration of the university, and supporting the president, his staff, the faculty, and all employees, in carrying out the mission of Taylor.

The 1989-90 school year will be a challenging one, with the highest student enrollment in the history of Taylor; with a new dormitory; with exciting new educational opportunities for our students; and, most importantly, with deepened spiritual growth on the part of the board, staff and students.

With your continued support... in service, in prayer, in giving... and under the Lordship of Christ, Taylor University will continue to be "effectively Christian" in its ministry to our wonderful young people, and finally through them, to the world.

Most sincerely,

Carl W. Hassel

Former baseball coach's son got his start at Taylor

The road to the big leagues

Jeff King, infielder for the Pittsburgh Pirates baseball team, started his road to the majors at Taylor when his father, Associate Director of Development Jack King '59, was the Trojan's baseball coach. Jeff and his brothers spent a lot of time catching fly balls during batting practice and foul pop-ups during Taylor baseball games. Here, Jack looks on as Jeff autographs balls after a win over the Cincinnati Reds.

Jeff, (far right), relaxes before the game with team members Bobby Bonilla and Barry Bonds. Life in the big leagues is not all glamour and roaring fans, Jeff asserts. "The only difference between the major leagues and the minors is you get to travel first class," he says.

Warming up before the game, Jeff keeps life in the big leagues in perspective. "Sure, 20,000 to 30,000 people are constantly critiquing your performance. But that comes with the territory. I've played with enough distinction to deserve the chance to be here." Jack King, qualified to pass judgement both as a former baseball coach and proud father, nods his head in agreement.—JG

Maynard Ketcham is a volunteer in the prison ministries department of the Assemblies of God. He has written 15,000 letters to prisoners and preached in prisons across the U.S. He served as a missionary of his church for 44 years, the last 19 as field director over 500 missionaries in the Asia-Pacific area. Following that, he taught missions for 8 years at Central Bible College and Evangel College. He lives at 3032 Maranatha Lane, Springfield, MO 65803.

1927

Mable (Thomas) Norris has moved from North Carolina to HC 83, Box 250, Coquille, OR 97423, c/o her son and daughter-in-law, Dick & Mary (Winters) Norris, both '51. Another son, James '51, also graduated from Taylor, and thirteen grandchildren and their spouses are alumni: Rick '72, John '74, Pam (Ware '75) Printup, Jim & Judy (Vasselin), both '76, Dana x77 & Bob Pew, Vicki '77 & Bud '78 Young, Becky '79, Dan '82 & Sandra (Fidler '83), and Scott '82. Wife of a United Methodist minister, Mable served as minister of music in churches her husband pastored for 46 years. Although now legally blind, she continues to enjoy travel and opportunities to share her faith.

1928

Esther Blank died June 14. She is survived by her sister, Lois Herbst, 1654 Thornapple Avenue, Akron, OH 44301.

1933

Arlene (Summers) Dillison died July 11 at her home after a long illness. Her husband, Charles, lives at 911 North Verlinden, Lansing, MI 48915. Her sister, Virginia Summers '28, lives at 201 South Mall Drive, Apt. 48, Lansing, MI 48917.

Rev. Fred & Elaine (Millhisler) Luthy celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary at a reception on June 18 given by their children, Craig x76 & Paula Luthy and Steve '73 & Darla (Luthy) McPhail. Fred is a retired professor from Taylor's religion department, and Elaine is a retired public school music teacher. They live at 312 Wright Street, Upland, IN 46989.

1951

Roberta Kessler retired in June after 29 years of teaching in Columbus, OH, elementary school. Prior to that, she taught and served as a dormitory head resident at Taylor. Currently, she is working part-time in an office and enjoying freedom from lesson plans and grading papers. Her address is 2225 Noe Bixby Road, Columbus, OH 43232.

1954

Forrest "Jack" Jackson, who held the basketball scoring record at Taylor until 1989, is still using a basketball to help him minister to youth in the Dayton, Ohio, area. As pastor of First Grace Brethren Church for the past 26 years, Jack has made athletics a bridge to the presentation of life's real values. A new 550-seat worship center was completed in 1987 at 2624 Stonequarry Road, Dayton, OH 45414.

1955

Mike & Lorena (Smith x56) Murphy were sent to Spain in May to produce a video of the OMS work there for showing in the U.S. Each year they will provide similar service in some OMS mission field, but their primary ministry continues to be in Brazil. Their address is Caixa Postal 58, 86.000 Londrina, Parana, Brazil.

1960

After 25 years of ministry in the United Methodist Church, the last five in Middlebury, Vermont, George Klohek has been appointed to serve the First United Methodist Church in Voorheesville, New York, a suburb of Albany. His address is R.D. 4 — 66 Maple Avenue, Voorheesville, NY 12186.

1961

Fred & Sandra Pomeroy have returned to New Mexico from Soldotna, Alaska, where Fred has been superintendent of Kenai Peninsula Borough School District for the past ten years. In his final year there, he was named Alaska Superintendent of the Year. Now he and Sandra are adjusting to warmer climates as Fred serves as superintendent of Tucumcari Public Schools. Their address is P.O. Box 1046, Tucumcari, NM 88401.

1962

Larry Lyman has been appointed pastor of Freeport United Methodist Church in Freeport, Pennsylvania, following four years as pastor of Westmont UMC in Johnstown. In 1988, he completed a master's degree in pastoral psychology and counseling from Ashland Theological Seminary, doing the course work at EMERGE Ministries, Inc., in Akron, Ohio. The Lyman family lives at 213 Fourth Street, Freeport, PA 16229. • When Suthy & Rodina (Priestley x62) MacLean concluded their furlough in August, they did not return to France. Instead, they went to Kandern, West Germany, where their sons are attending Black Forest Academy. They are working for the evangelization of students at the University of Strasbourg, France, which is near their German home.

Betty Freese,
Alumni notes editor

1963

A personal account of events in Beijing and Tiananmen Square

What future, China? What hope?

The feelings of Chinese students about their government find mute expression in this poster, one of many which appeared on university campuses in Beijing.

His voice came to me over our shoulders: "Here you may find the future and the hope of China."

He was an elderly man. His perfect English indicated he was a professor. He passed us by without further comment and disappeared into the crowd.

The Friday afternoon of June 2 was our first visit to see the statue, "goddess of democracy." It turned out to be our last visit to Tiananmen Square.

My husband and I had spent three satisfying years teaching English at two different Chinese universities: in southern China (1983), and in Beijing (1987-89).

Our students often spoke to us about their despair regarding future job assignments, finances and family pressure to succeed.

Students' dissatisfaction with the system sparked many interesting discussions. They were especially curious about our religious beliefs. Most had no concept of God. It was clear to us that Chinese people, and especially the academic community, were searching for something.

We were not surprised, then, when Hu Yao Bang's death in mid-April triggered a massive response by students. Hu had been the Communist Party chief until 1987 when he was stripped of his post because he was lenient with the student demonstrators.

Da zi baos, large character posters, appeared mysteriously on every Beijing campus and throughout the city. As new signs appeared each morning, hundreds flocked to read them. In the early morning hours, the more cautious read by flashlight.

At first, the posters were in memory of Hu, but as days passed, it was clear the students were using his death to make statements about their dissatisfaction with the government: "Save the Youth of China!" "Knowledge is important and should be stressed!" "We will pursue democracy and freedom until death!" "Make revolution! Advocate reform!" "It's time to wake up!"

By the end of April, a million demonstrators, led by university students, defied a ban on marches, took to the streets and headed for Tiananmen Square.

Triggered by a stinging criticism in the Chinese newspaper of the recent student boycott of classes, Beijing's 8 million citizens, as well as students, were aroused. Students distributed copies of their demands to the millions who lined Beijing streets on April 27.

As a university student handed me a copy of the students' demands, he asked me to share it with other foreigners. Quickly, I crammed it into my backpack, thinking it was a 'souvenir' of what I knew was an historic event.

On the night before what was to be the first of many marches, I visited several of my students in their dorms.

Several were not convinced that a march in defiance of government orders would be an effective way to help their demands be met. Others were afraid of reprisals and their parents' warnings not to participate.

One girl, still not convinced about participating, suggested they take bikes in order to make a quick escape, if needed.

The strongest of the group urged them to walk together bravely and not try to escape, even if the policemen were to have weapons. With tears in their eyes and locking arms together, they vowed to stick together. That night was a sleepless one for them.

By the time they returned to our campus at midnight the next evening, crowds cheered as they jubilantly entered the college gates. The dining halls were opened. Students reported excitedly to us that the people of Beijing not only cheered them on, but also gave them food, drinks and even pairs of shoes.

The excitement that night was contagious. Even the normally unmotivated food service workers cheerfully served the midnight diners.

Midnight marches on campuses and day-long marches to Tiananmen Square gave way to "camping" on the Square.

By then, the students' main goal was to have "an honest and open dialogue with top leaders regarding their demands." When this proposal failed because the top leaders refused to meet with the newly formed student association, thousands of university students from other parts of China flooded Tiananmen and lived on the Square for weeks.

By mid-May, Gorbachev's historic visit and the hunger strikers attracted world-wide attention.

On May 20, martial law was declared. What followed were 14 sleepless nights of road blocks, barricades and waiting for troops who never advanced.

We visited a park on Saturday, June 3. Trying to have fun that day was like eating delicious food without having a sense of taste. Everyone knew that something bad would happen soon, but no one knew what or when, and all of us were weary from the two weeks of anticipation. It was to begin that night.

We first heard the gunfire at about 10 p.m. We tried to comfort each other with suggestions that troops were firing tear gas cannons and rubber bullets.

Feeling isolated, we walked home and quietly lay in bed until 3 a.m. listening to machine gun fire and wondering about students and friends who might be outside.

A friend telephoned at 4 a.m. from a hospital where he worked to tell us of the slaughter.

Later, a dozen foreigners joined together for prayer in our apartment. In spite of (or perhaps, because of) our great grief, shock, and fear, the passages we read from the Bible leapt from the pages and became living words of comfort from God's own mouth.

"So do not be afraid of them. There is nothing concealed that will not be disclosed, or hidden that will not be made known...."

Do not be afraid of those who can kill the body, but be afraid of the One who can destroy both body and soul in hell. Are not two sparrows sold for a penny? Yet not one of them will fall to the ground apart from the will of your Father.

And even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. So don't be afraid; you are worth more than many sparrows." (Matthew 10:26-30)

On Sunday, we wept. Black arm bands were distributed to the few students who hadn't fled from their dormitories to their houses.

"They're burning all the bodies...no one will ever know how many died," one of our students cried as we walked arm in arm.

A black banner with names of those who died was draped over our college gate.

Students told us that five to ten thousand people were killed. Later, these reports were confirmed by other eyewitnesses, including journalists from Hong Kong.

Intermittent gunfire continued to sound around the city as people searched for friends and loved ones. One of our students stopped as he biked through campus. "I'm going back to the square to look for my friend. We went there together, but I can't find him now."

Despite the gunfire, people went to help the wounded and the grieving, and some went to talk to the troops who had killed so mercilessly.

Sunday's atmosphere of shock a bad dream.

But words were the only comfort we could offer those we saw—words which sounded trite, even as we spoke them, but truths we believe with all our hearts:

God is not blind to what happened; God doesn't let evil go unpunished; with Christ there is forgiveness for sin and hope, even in impossible situations.

Though we were nauseous with despair for our Chinese friends, we no longer had any fear of death during those last four days in Beijing. We simply knew that God was still God and was still in control. If our time to die had come, we were ready.

With this assurance, we continued to cook for anyone who came at mealtime. We continued to pack our belongings. We continued to say good bye and comfort friends we could safely visit or those who took the risk to come see us.

We waited until Thursday, June 8, to be evacuated by a friend from the New Zealand Embassy. We went to a hotel for a few hours. Then, after less than an hour at the airport, we boarded a flight to Hong Kong.

As teachers here and in China, we believe, with the professor we met at Tiananmen Square, that students are a country's "future and hope." As Christian teachers, we know, assuredly, China's future and hope lies in Christ. Our prayer for China is that her leaders will repent and turn to God and that the 8 million residents of Beijing and 1.1 billion Chinese will, from this tragedy, learn of their only Future and Hope.—BH and numbness turned into one of panic by Monday morning, at least in Beijing's foreign community. Yet, while all around us there was a sense of fear and chaos, we experienced four days of peace and orderliness in our apartment.

Though we were never to see many students and friends again, those moments spent with ones who came to say good bye are precious to us.

Words seem meaningless when friends come to us full of grief, with no hope for the future of their children or their country, and words could seem even more empty when they come from the mouths of foreigners who can simply get on a plane and pretend it was all

Thank you for your generous and sacrificial giving to Taylor during the 1988-89 school year. We sincerely appreciate your support.

 TAYLOR UNIVERSITY

It only takes a spark . . .

The glow of candles illuminates the Rediger Chapel/Auditorium during the commissioning service for Taylor World Outreach. Even so, the combined gifts of her many donors enable Taylor University to shine forth as a beacon to a dark and wanting world.

A candle may be set aflame by a single spark. Your gifts to Taylor University, joined with those of other loyal supporters, fuel a flame that has been burning bright for nearly 150 years. Yours is a significant role. Thank you.
